February 1, 2025

Wise Man

The phrase "If you can't run with the big dogs; stay on the porch!" is a colloquial expression that suggests if someone is not able to keep up with the challenges or pace set by the leaders or those at the forefront, they should not attempt to participate. It's a metaphorical way to encourage people to recognize their limitations and act accordingly. The 'big dogs' represent those who are strong, capable, and dominant in a particular area, while the 'porch' symbolizes a place of safety and observation, away from the action. This saying is often used to motivate individuals to either step up their game and face challenges head-on or to accept their current capabilities and avoid overreaching. It speaks to the competitive nature of human endeavors, where the ability to match the pace of the best is often seen as a measure of success. However, it's also a reminder that it's okay to acknowledge when something is beyond one's current skill level or capacity, emphasizing the importance of self-awareness and realistic self-assessment in personal growth and decision-making.